Monthly report as of August 31, 2023

The world's broad equity markets generally developed negatively during the month expressed in US dollar and euro, except for some countries. On the other hand, the development was significantly more positive expressed in Swedish krona as the krona weakened during the period. Risk appetite varied in the summer-thin market, where a major focus has been on central banks' continued actions. A soft-landing scenario, increased bond issuance, a downwardly revised credit rating and a continued strong labour market drove US interest rates higher and pressured the equity market. Weak economic statistics from Europe, led by Germany, clearly showed reduced growth, both in the service and manufacturing industries. Price data showed a continued downward trend, although high prices in the services sector remain a concern. Weak economic data from China with deflationary tendencies highlighted the weakness of the recovery. The Chinese central bank continued its interest rate cuts and promised new stimulus to support the economy and real estate sector.

The fund declined during the month and lost marginally against its benchmark. The factor allocation was basically neutral, with a negative impact from the focus on smaller companies balanced by an overweight towards quality companies and companies with positive market sentiment. The lack of holdings in the energy sector had a negative impact on relative returns. Corporate elections in Japan were strong during the month, while corporate elections in the US were weaker. For example, an overweight in the US pharmaceutical company Lilly (Eli) & Co had a strong negative impact on relative returns. On the positive side, we find, for example, the American payment solutions company Visa Inc, where an overweight contributed positively during the period.

The fund has an objective and disciplined investment process with clear quality and sentiment elements over time. It is our conviction that companies characterized by high quality, favourable valuations and that the market's attitude to the share will gradually improve in the long run will generate positive relative returns.
