

SEB Global High Yield Fund

Monthly report as of August 31, 2023

Past performance is not indicative of future results. The value of investments and income derived from investments may rise as well as fall. Future returns are not guaranteed, and a loss of principal may occur. Key Information Documents and prospectuses are available at www.sebgroup.lu

The first half of the month was characterised by rising bond yields, with US bond yields leading the way. There were several explanations for the movement in rates. US macroeconomic data continues to show surprising strength, which increases the likelihood of a prolonged period with high policy rates, even if inflation is currently showing a downward trend. In addition, large new issues of government bonds put pressure on the bond market. Finally, there was speculation that Chinese authorities were selling US government bonds to raise funds to support the purchase of their currency. The global macro picture is fragmented. The US surprised positively, while the picture in Europe and China is the opposite. In particular, the Chinese economy is weak, mainly due to the real estate sector. The authorities are trying to stimulate economic activity with various measures, but the markets are not impressed. The Chinese stock market continues to fall and during the month it also acted as a drag on the rest of the world.

The fund value fell by just over 0.2% during the month, mainly due to rising treasury yields. It was slightly worse than the global high-yield market in general. The high-yield market has had an impressive return during the year, partly due to the fact that the new supply has been small. Our investments outside the traditional high-yield market, e.g. subordinated bank bonds, have not really kept up with the high-yield rally.

Both companies and households have coped better than expected with interest rate increases. At the same time, we know that monetary policy works with a time lag. The positive scenario for the credit market is if the economic downturn lasts until inflation is under control and central banks can start cutting interest rates. Interest rate cuts would give fresh oxygen to economic activity. But it is a delicate balancing act that central banks have to perform, and the pitfalls are many. Some caution in positioning is preferable.

The fund's investment policy

This actively managed fund invests globally, mainly in green bonds with a sustainability profile, that directly or indirectly have a beneficial effect for the environment and the climate. A few examples are projects such as wind farms, water purification plants, clean transportation, sustainable agriculture, and waste management. At least 80% of the portfolio is invested in green bonds. When selecting investments, the fund also considers criteria for business ethics, the environment and social responsibility. The fund applies positive as well as negative screening. The fund invests in investment grade assets, which are assets from issuers with ratings no lower than investment grade or the equivalent. The fund may also invest up to 10% of its portfolio in unrated securities. The fund manager performs a sustainability risk as well as a credit risk assessment prior to investing. For detailed information about the fund's sustainability approach, see the fund's Sustainability Information document on the Prices & Facts section of our website.
